The Purpose of This Workbook and How to Use It

Welcome! You're here because you want to grow your business and career by becoming a content marketing expert.

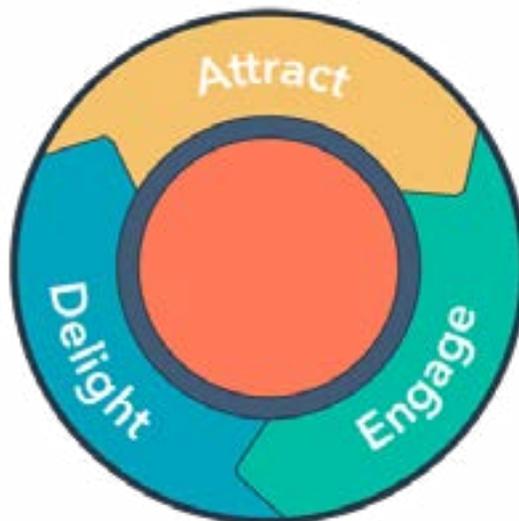

To start, what is content marketing?

Content marketing is a strategic marketing and business process focused on creating and distributing valuable, relevant, and consistent content to attract and retain a clearly defined audience and ultimately drive profitable customer action.

When done correctly, this helps create a relationship with your audience, which leads to trust. And when your audience members trust you, they're more willing to do business with you when they're ready to make a purchasing decision.

To communicate with your audience, you need to produce content. Content has the very important job of pulling people from one stage of the inbound methodology to another.

Your content should attract the right people to your site, engage those people into leads, and nurture and help close them into customers. But it doesn't stop there. Your content should also delight your customers and turn them into promoters of your brand.

In a nutshell, content marketing is the art of communicating with your prospects and customers without having to sell to them. As opposed to advertising your products and services, you're creating helpful, engaging content that your prospects and customers can enjoy and learn from.

The following activities and resources will help you create and grow a repeatable content process for your business. Each section connects to a lesson featured in the Content Marketing Certification course. If you haven't done so already, I highly encourage you to sign up for this course and complete each lesson before working on the practical exercises. This course has become the industry standard for content marketing professionals. In fact, more than 40,000 professionals across the globe have completed the Content Marketing Certification since it launched in 2016.

Earning your Content Marketing Certification and completing this workbook are the first steps toward becoming an expert in the industry.

Here's a list of suggestions to get the most value out of this workbook:

- Please save this workbook to the desktop on your computer. This way your progress will be saved correctly as you complete each section.
- If you prefer to have a hard copy to write on, then print this PDF.
- Join the Content Marketing Study Group on HubSpot's Community. We believe the best way to learn content marketing is by implementing strategies, sharing ideas, and discussing what you've learned with a group of marketers, just like you.
- Tweet me (@JustinRChampion) and HubSpot Academy (@HubSpotAcademy). We're here to support you, and we want to follow your journey.

Now let's get started!

Case Study

Townsend Security

Need proof that this workbook is a transformational resource? Learn more from a business that completed the practical exercises from each section and sustainably grew their business (which is still growing today).

Written by Ken Mafli, Townsend Security's Senior Digital Marketing Manager

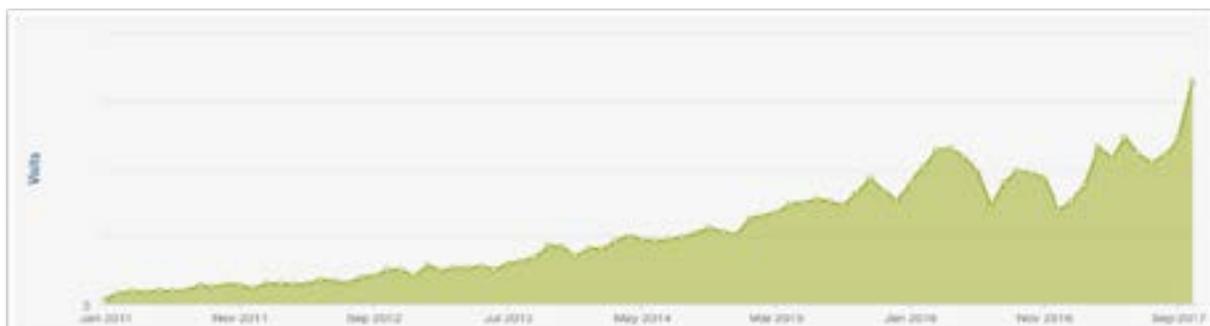

Townsend Security is a leading provider of affordable enterprise-grade encryption key management for an organization's data at rest. We are a smaller company that routinely goes up against competitors whose marketing budgets dwarf our own. So how do we make our voice heard? Simple: a rock-solid, completely human-centric inbound content marketing strategy.

In the eight-plus years we've been doing inbound, we've seen upward of 1,085% more non-paid traffic to our website. The real shocker: In that time, my team has grown its monthly new contacts by roughly 19,000% for non-paid leads. The disparity between those two numbers is a perfect example of the power of inbound: more highly qualified web traffic that converts to a much higher rate of leads.

Content marketing is continuously evolving. HubSpot has proven time and again to be on the forefront of the best-producing content marketing strategies. In 2016, we were invited to participate in a beta program that HubSpot was conducting that would later be known as the topic cluster framework. In it, you produce a pillar page – a webpage that completely informs prospects about a specific topic. From there, you surround your pillar page with subtopics (e.g., blog posts, videos, infographics, etc.), each with a link back to the pillar page.

With this methodology in hand, we created our first pillar page and launched it in the first week of January 2017. Over the next six months, we continued to optimize it, all the while promoting it via social media and online information security magazines.

The results were outstanding. Our pillar page brought record-high organic traffic and a record number of leads. We couldn't be happier with the results and with the guidance that HubSpot provided through its free resources and one-on-one consulting.

That said, content marketing isn't for the faint of heart. If you're looking for a "slap it on the website and they will come" approach, you're in the wrong place. You need true grit and the unwavering resolve to fully understand what your personas need at each step of the buyer's journey – and you need to provide it like no one else does. If you provide your prospects with the experience they deserve, you – like us – will be amazed by the results.

The Content Marketing Workbook is the road map you will need to chart your course toward success. Throughout this workbook, you'll learn from some of our examples. I'm confident that by using this workbook, you will build a unique content strategy that's tailored to the needs of your personas. By doing so, and by executing on that plan, you will find your own path to success and reach results you never thought possible.

Section 1

The Power of Storytelling

Everyone loves a great story. People want to feel connected to a group, to belong. Stories give us a reason to communicate and relate. Stories are stimulating and give us something to believe in. Stories make us feel better, smarter, safer, or even loved.

Business storytelling is similar. It's about creating alignment between your business and your prospects and customers.

But telling your brand's story is more than what you write on your website, your blog, or even social media. It's your value, your mission, and how you communicate them consistently to your audience – wherever they are.

Let's put it into practice.

In the box below, write your business's "why." This should be written in the form of a one-sentence purpose or mission statement.

Section 2

Building a Content Creation Framework

A content creation framework is a structure of processes for publishing content – from the beginning stages to post-publication.

With a framework in place, your team can foster creative ideas in an organized, scalable manner. A framework strikes that perfect balance between autonomous creativity and long-term content sustainability.

Let's put it into practice.

Section 3

Planning a Long-term Content Strategy

Planning provides a road map for your content. You'll be making confident and more tactical decisions regarding what topic you'll be talking about, what format your content will take, and when you'll be publishing it.

With a content plan, you and your team can stay organized and even factor in ad hoc content requests like company initiatives or other on-demand marketing tasks.

Let's put it into practice.

PRACTICAL EXERCISE 1

If you don't already have a primary buyer persona established for your business, create one using HubSpot's free Make My Persona tool.

In the box below, write a quick profile for your primary buyer persona.

TOWNSEND SECURITY EXAMPLE

Below is an overview of Townsend Security's primary buyer persona, Growing Awareness Andy:

- Andy's quick profile: Andy is an IT professional whose job touches on cybersecurity. While his title might not always reflect his data security responsibilities, he has taken on these duties in an effort to help his company with its cybersecurity challenges.

- Awareness stage driver: Key stakeholders in his company are uneasy about the company's current security posture, and recent breaches in the news have only highlighted the need for increased security. They are not sure what they need in order to better secure their data, but they know they have to do something.

PRACTICAL EXERCISE 2

Perform a content audit and an event-based audit for your business using this Google Sheets template.

PRACTICAL EXERCISE 3

Identify the buyer's journey for your primary buyer persona. The goal is to help this buyer through each stage: awareness, consideration, and decision. And while there's no magic number for the amount of content within the buyer's journey, let's start by identifying three pieces of content.

For the awareness stage, we recommend identifying a comprehensive educational resource like a guide or ebook.

1. Awareness stage

In the box below, outline a content format and theme. (Think of this like a working title. What do you want to communicate?)

2. Consideration stage

Generating Content Ideas

Humans are always coming up with new ideas. Whether we're lying in bed, commuting to work, or going for a run, our minds have a seemingly endless ability to generate new ideas.

But as natural and easy as this process might sometimes feel, it gets tricky when your job depends on it.

A content marketer – or any creative, for that matter – doesn't have the leisure to have an "off day." Your content ideas fuel your work. Run out of gas, and your content initiatives will stall.

Let's put it into practice.

Section 5

Creating Quality Blog Content Your Audience Loves to Read and Share

Think back to the last blog post you read. Did you skim through it as opposed to reading it because the introduction didn't hold your attention? Did the content seem to ramble as opposed to getting to the point? Were you unable to find a helpful next step to continue your journey?

If you answered "yes" to all of these questions, the author who wrote the blog post probably didn't pay close enough attention to the structure of the content. And he or she is suffering the consequences: You, along with many others, stopped reading the post.

All effective blog posts have a blueprint. You might not easily see it, but it's there, and it's meant to help you, the reader, through your journey to making a well-informed, confident decision – whatever that decision might be.

Let's put it into practice.

How HubSpot Uses Blogging to Rank #1 on Google

Here at HubSpot, blogging is our primary source of traffic. In fact, a significant percentage of HubSpot customers first stumbled upon our brand and our website through our blog – usually by searching for something on Google and clicking through to one of our blog posts.

To understand how HubSpot uses blogging to rank in search, we have to first understand how blogging helps anyone rank in search. Blogging on topics that are relevant to your business will do two things: help you build relevance to rank for more search queries and help you build authority on those topics to rank higher in search results.

Let's put it into practice.

Section 7

Extending the Value of Your Content Through Repurposing

Imagine you're a content creator tasked with writing blog posts, content offers, video scripts, and so on as part of your daily job function. That's a lot of content to create.

Repurposing content allows you to extend the value of your content by changing it to serve a different purpose, like transforming the messaging of several blog posts to create a guide or reusing content from your guide to help you create an educational video series. The messaging is the same, but the channel or format in which it's consumed is different.

Let's put it into practice.

Section 8

Creating Topic Clusters and Pillar Pages

If you want to create effective content that converts visitors into leads and eventually customers, you need to create a helpful, positive user experience that solves for both the searcher and the search engine, not just one or the other.

Here's how you can solve for both: Create targeted clusters of relevant content that each covers a specific topic in depth. These targeted clusters then need to lead to a centralized hub, known as a pillar page.

A pillar page (also known as a content pillar or power page) is a website page that covers a specific topic in depth and is linked to a cluster of related content.

Let's put it into practice.

Encryption key management is administering the full lifecycle of cryptographic keys and protecting them from loss or misuse. Protection of the encryption keys includes limiting access to the keys physically, logically, and through user/role access.

Create a script for one of your educational website pages using this template.

SCRIPT	SHOT LIST
Hi, I'd like to introduce you to the basic concepts around encryption and proper key management.	Intro screen with title pop-in and Townsend logo.
Encryption is like a safe with the encryption keys being the combination to that safe.	Dissolve title, intro safe and spin the combination knob.
If you have data that needs to be protected,	Intro database icon.
using strong encryption can protect your data, even from the most ingenious hackers.	Put safe over the database, put a bomb next to the safe and explode it, with it being moved to the left side, intact.
But if you leave the combination to that safe just lying around, even the strongest safe can't protect your data.	Intro the encryption key "paper" with the hacker reading it and spinning the combination knob. Have a line come under the safe and flip it.

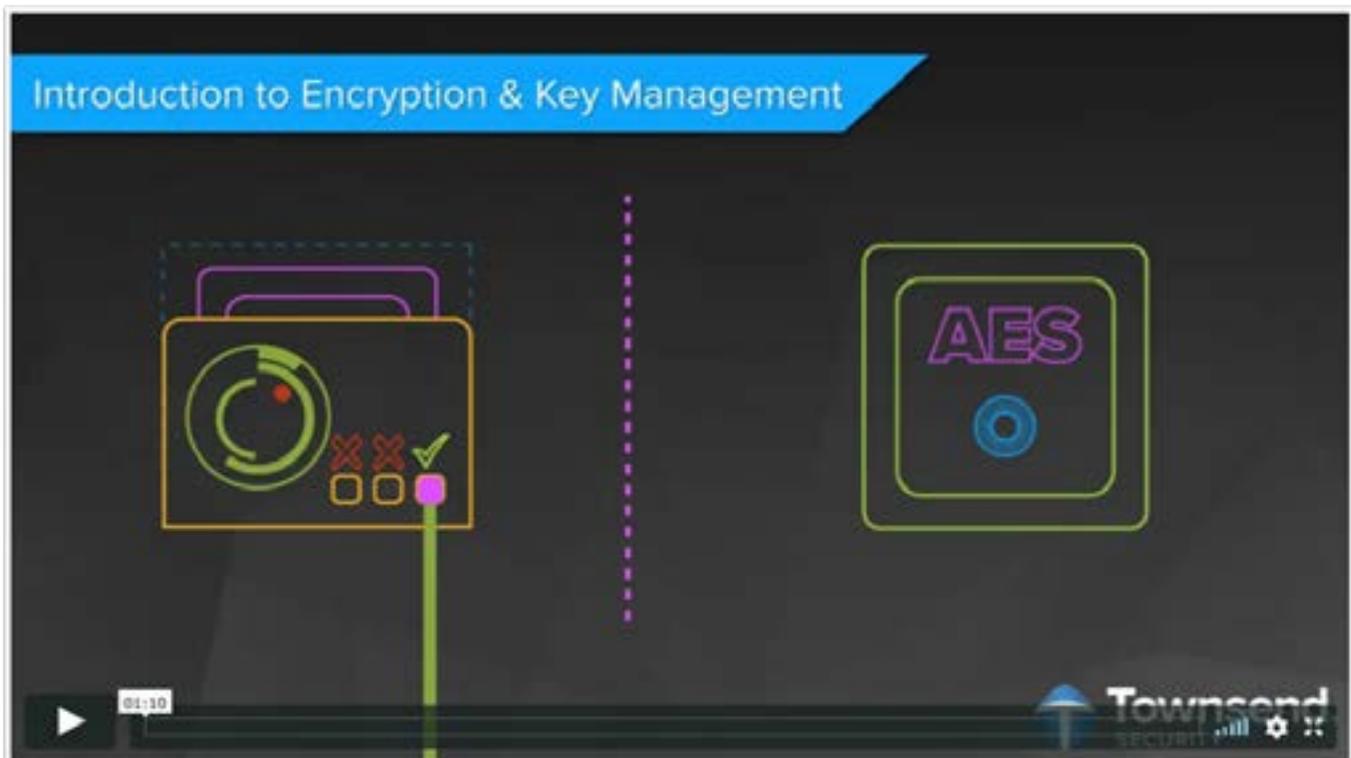

PRACTICAL EXERCISE 2

Using the script you wrote, create a video and embed it on your website.

6 APR 2017 OPINION

2016 Year of the Mega-Breach, More to Come?

Ken Mafli Senior Digital Marketing Manager at Townsend Security
Follow @Encryptken

With over four billion records leaked last year, "2016 was a defining year for security" reported IBM X-Force in its recent report. For me there were three brief highlights from the report:

- "The average client organization experienced more than 54 million security events in 2016"—only 3% more events than 2015
- Client organizations experienced an average 12% decrease in attacks in 2016 compared to 2015
- The average monitored client was found to have experienced 93 security incidents in 2016, down 48% from the 178 discovered in 2015

This means an unprecedented amount of records were exposed last year, even though the total amount of attacks reported went down. IBM X-Force's conclusion: this likely means that the hackers are getting better at their jobs. Hackers are finding what works and what doesn't and are focusing their energies on time-tested attacks.

Also, unstructured data was hit hard in 2016. We are all used to the data breaches where structured data like passwords, credit card data, or personal health information is exfiltrated and sold on the black market to the highest bidder, but 2016 saw large amounts of unstructured data exposed, such as "gigabytes of email archives, documents, intellectual property and source code".

This rise in unstructured data breaches is not entirely new. This kind of hack has always been a concern for businesses (such as with the Sony hack of 2014). Yet the rise of exposing sensitive, embarrassing, or strategic information should be a concern to anyone looking to

Measuring and Analyzing Your Content

There are a ton of metrics out there that you can report on to understand your content's performance. For a blog post, you might be interested in webpage visitors, time on page, and referral traffic. For a video, maybe you're more interested in watch time, social media shares, and impressions. And if you're offering a webinar, landing page conversions for registration might be your top metric. Regardless of what type of content you're measuring, there are numerous metrics that impact its success.
